Other presenters include leaders from around the nation on topics covering: community engagement, creative marketing, and telling your story.

"We were very pleased to be chosen as the host site this year amongst some other top universities, said SVO President Zachary Quiett. "We're excited to bring this unique opportunity to IU South Bend and show the student body, the South Bend community and our visiting universities, what kind of student veterans IU South Bend has. We hope many student vets can take advantage of this opportunity."

With the continued influx of veterans into higher education, it is important for SVOs to develop the skills necessary to support the transition of their brothers and sisters in arms and create an environment that is sustainable for a successful campus-based organization. This conference will offer an intensive and interactive professional development experience for today's veteran as well as strengthen the ability of veteran program administrators to better serve the growing population of student veterans.
